"And I keep telling to myself: you can be whoever you want..."

Born and raised in Sicily, Angelo Romano (1982) is a singer/songwriter with a totally personal approach to music.

Based in Barcelona since 2016, after years of living in Berlin, the Netherlands and Italy, he now plays regularly as a duo with local cellist María Borrell, to add a mellower depth to the rawness of his songs.

His tunes come from the weird storybook of his life, where he sketches all the cities he lived, the stories he stole and came across, the seashores he walked along, the moments he witnessed and left behind. In English when he wants to be widely understood, and Sicilian when he instead prefers to sing the language of his heart.

His style might be best described as an experimental acoustic post-punk blend of Tom Waits, Bob Dylan, Nick Cave and Screamin' Jay Hawkins. Still, with a distinctive Sicilian accent to make it all so unique.
